Pedrl. Why?
Pedro. You'l find a fidle that neuer will be tun'd else from all such women deliuer me. — Exit Pedro Enter Row. What ayles the fellow trow? Jaques Jaques your freind Sir, but very full of busines.
Row Nothing but busines prethee thy reason; is there anie dying?
Jaq. I would there were Sir.
Row But thy busines?
Jaq. Ile tell you in a word, I am sent to lay an imposition vpon sowse and puddings, pasties, and pennie custards, that the women may not relecue you rebels, fare you well Sir.
Row. How does thy Mistris?
Jaq. Like a restie iade Shee's spoyl'd for ryding. — Exit Row. What a diuell ails they?
Custards and pennie pasties, fooles and fidles
What's this to th'purpose? o well met — Enter Sopho.
Sopho. Now Rowland, I cannot stay to talke long.
Row. What's the matter?
here's stirring, but to what end? whether goe you?
Sopho. To view the workes.
Row. What workes?
Soph. The womens trenches.
Row Trenches, are such to see?
Soph I doe not iest Sir.
Row. I cannot vnderstand you.
Sopho. Doe not you heare in what a state of quarrell the new bride Stands

Stands with her husband
Row. Let him stand with her, and there's an end.
Sopho. It should be, but birlady she holds him out at pikes end, and defies him, and now is fortifi'd, such a regiment of Rutters Neu'r defide men brauer. I am sent to view their preparation.
Row. This is newes Stranger then armies in the aire: you saw not my gentle Mistris.
Sopho. Yes, and meditating vpon some secret busines, when she had found it she leap'd for ioy, and laugh'd, and straite retir'd to shun Moroso.
Row. This may be for me.
Sopho. Will you along?
Row. No.
Soph. fare you well. Exit Sophocles.
Row. Fare you well Sir.
What should her musing meane, and what her ioy in't?
if not for my aduantage? stay, may not that bobtaile iade Moroso, with his gold his gew-gäes, and the hope she has to send him Enter Liuia and quickly to dust, excite this? here she comes. Moroso as vnseene by her & yonder walkes the stallion to discouer
yet Ile salute her: Saue you beauteous Mistris Liuia The fox is kennell'd for me, saue you Sir.
Row. Why doe you looke so strange?
Liui. I vse to looke, Sir, without examination.
Moroso. I thanke thee for that word,
Row. Belike then

The